Short Bio. . .

Patrick Jordan is a Director of Photography based in Dublin who graduated from the National Film School in Dun Laoghaire in 2001.

He has worked on many award winning productions that have picked up accolades at Irish Film Festivals such as Cork, Galway, Foyle as well as many international festivals.

Patrick has photographed six IFTA (Irish Film & TV Awards) nominated projects and has worked on films which have screened at venues and festivals such as Tribeca, IndieLisboa, Rotterdam and The Museum of Modern Art (MoMa) in NY.

In 2011, Patrick shot the feature film Stitches for director Conor McMahon. The film, which stars English comedian Ross Noble, tells the story of a killer clown at a teenage birthday party. A comedy-horror primarily funded by the Irish Film Board, the project is produced by Fantastic Films.

Short film projects include the IFTA nominated short film Pentecost (2010), directed by Peter McDonald, which won Best Irish Short at the Cork Film Festival amongst other awards. This film has been nominated for an Oscar at the 2012 Academy Awards.

Of the forty short films Patrick has shot, acclaimed productions include The Faeries of Blackheath (2006) directed by Ciarán Foy and The White Dress (2007), directed by Vanessa Gildea.

Patrick has been the DOP on many documentaries shot in various countries around the world including America, Kosovo, Mali, Ethiopia and Haiti. These include Dambé - The Mali Project, Dreaming the Quiet Man, Jimmy Murakami - Non-Alien and most recently a production about the Irish / German author Hugo Hamilton and a six part documentary series on Women of the IRA.

His work also features in the IFTA nominated television comedy series, The Savage Eye, directed by Kieron J Walsh and Damien O'Donnell as well as dozens of other Irish television series, music videos and experimental films.
